IN THE DARK

Midnight broaded weird and long.
Nothing broke the wintry gloom
Save the drower monotone
Of the clock, as, one by one,
rem its strady hands the minutes
into my silent room.

Close beside the larger bed.
Stood the cradic in its place;
Mid its blankets, softly spread,
Lay the baby's golden head,
And his light breath, comme, g
gently fanned against my face

Something in the darkness att red,
Warmiy nestling at my side
Like a little steepy brd,
"Mamma!" very low the word,
Hush and darkness made the tarr
space between us seem to wide.

Then I murmured, as he lay,
"Mamma's close beside you dear;
Soon the night will go away.
By and by it will be day,
In the morning when my baby wake
mamma will be here."

Wandering fingers toward me crept;
"Mamma, let me hold your hand.
Clasping it he hushed and siep;
Clasping his I could have wept,
tumbled by that perfect trut whit needed not to understand.

Years have passed me by since then; Long the little had has atted Empty, silent; yet, again, Thrilling deeper than my pain; lones the tender voice to bank h every hitter, doubling mood.

Through the voiceless burh of death,
Through life's midnight dark and dim.
Turning unto Christ, who said
To each asking sout, "Have faith"
Heavening of I reach my longing, groping human hands to him Does he take them? Ay, he does!
All the chasm deep and wide
Spanning by His love that flows
Freely for all human wees,

New York, 25—The Times publishes a letter of an Indiana correspondent on election prospects. It says our correspondent's previous statements in regard to the progress of the Indiana campaign have been distinguished by the sobriety of judgment well calculated to carry conviction. It appears that, disappointed in forming a working alliance with greenbackers, the democrate are doing their best to custain that party in hopes that its votes will come mainly from republicans.
